Mr. Biden,

On behalf of the members and supporters of the National Right to Work Committee, I urge you to demonstrate your commitment to justice and fairness for workers by rejecting any support you have received from the corrupt leadership of the United Auto Workers (UAW).

As of early June, 10 senior officials of the UAW have pled guilty to federal crimes including embezzlement, racketeering, and labor law violations.

Former UAW President Gary Jones, who himself only pled guilty just over two months ago, admitted to "scheming with at least six [ . . . ] union officials" to spend over a million dollars in union treasury money, much of it forced dues extracted from workers in non-Right to Work states.

An ongoing probe by the Justice Department has uncovered shocking corruption and rampant misconduct in the UAW, spanning at least a decade.

The investigation, led by U.S. Attorney Matthew Schneider, has repeatedly suggested that the current UAW top brass' failure to cooperate is likely to lead to a government takeover of the union, much like what happened to the Teamsters just over 30 years ago.

Disturbingly, however, it seems as though UAW officials are deliberately stalling in a cynical ploy to "run out the clock" on the Trump Justice Department, in the hopes that your administration will let them off the hook.

It is no surprise, therefore, that these same union bosses are currently spending millions to get you elected.

Ordinary Americans have ample reason to suspect that there is a connection between UAW President Rory Gamble's enthusiastic endorsement of your presidential bid on April 21 and his nonchalance in the face of U.S. Attorney Schneider's warnings about a federal takeover of the UAW.

This is troubling, to say the least.

If you are elected, a refusal to stand up to the UAW would taint your Justice Department from day one, sending a clear message to American workers that union boss malfeasance will continue to go unpunished so long as Big Labor has greased the right palms.

Americans deserve a president who will put the rights of workers above the demands of union bosses. It is for this reason that I am calling on you to disavow the support of these UAW kingpins, and to return any funds they have contributed to your campaign.

Sincerely,
